

From opb.org: "OPB is zeroing in on a group of students that started kindergarten at Earl Boyles Elementary, an ethnically and racially diverse school in Southeast Portland. Most of the students at Earl Boyles qualify for free or reduced lunch. Twenty-eight Earl Boyles families with children who entered first grade in 2013 agreed to allow OPB reporters and producers to follow them. During the past year, we've visited these families in their homes. Reporter Rob Manning, Public Insight journalist Amanda Peacher, and photographer Michael Clapp have interviewed, filmed and photographed these students and their families.

This spring, we take an in-depth look at first grade students with the broadcast of a one-hour documentary, "Class of 2025" on June 3, 2014 and this interactive multimedia site showcasing some of the students' stories."

Access the OPB site and watch the documentary!